State of the Black world: Accepting our responsibility

Dr. Ron Daniels

Julianne Malveaux

Carrie Glover

Tim Smith

Minister Louis Farrakhan

placed Katrina survivor Mtangulizo Samyika who described Farrakhan as a global evangelist, a throwback "global humanist" and a Muslim extraordinaire who loves humanity profoundly. The Minister subsequently addressed the recent historic presidential election of Barack Obama and what it means to Black America.

We have addressed issues in this column and the readers making a call for [illegible] from the pulpit [illegible]

Avondale Pastor Wallace: 'God has been good to me these 30 years at Carmel'

By Dan Yount
The Cincinnati Herald

Carmel Presbyterian Church pastor Rev. Clarence S. Wallace said when he became assistant pastor at the historic Avondale church 30 years ago, the congregation was discussing options to move due to the dispersion of a number of members to other communities. However, because of its history in the community and its mission of serving the community, it was decided the church needed to continue its work at its Reading Road site.

Wallace said he's glad the church stayed in Avondale. "My goal in entering the ministry at the time was to become an urban pastor," he said. "Working with this congregation and in partnership with other churches in Avondale in our community outreach here has been something I have really enjoyed over my time as pastor here, which has been half of my lifetime."

Wallace's service to the church and community was celebrated recently at a dinner at National Underground Railroad Freedom Center and at a Carmel Sunday worship service.

Wallace, 59, is a fourth generation Presbyterian who has roots in Glen Heights, a community in Charleston, S.C. His maternal grandmother helped found ing Presbyterian Church in Glen Heights, which became what he calls a family church – with uncles serving as church officials and his mother and her six children active in the church. His mother, Mildred Hambley, and other family members from South Carolina also attended

Carmel Presbyterian Church Pastor Rev. Clarence Wallace, at right, is congratulated by church member Davies Grant at a recent service at the church to celebrate Wallace's 30 years with the church. Additional photos on page B7

At events here recently to celebrate Wallace's 30 years [illegible] spoke [illegible] all spoke [illegible] Wallace graduated from Johnson C. Smith University [illegible] Presbyterian Seminary [illegible] Development [illegible] master [illegible]

CAA celebrates 44 years of service to the community